Learn What Your Heart Desires

Dovid Kopel

The greatest angle is another יסוד (foundation) I learned from my Rebbe, which is straight from חז״ל. I asked Rebbe what I should learn on the night of שבועות. Some have the custom of reading a special compendium of תורה that is supposed to encompass all of תורה, called the תיקון ליל שבועות. Rebbe responded with a big smile and said, גמר מה שלבו חפץ — in other words, learn what your heart desires.

If all that bochur learns are things he doesn't understand, that's not great for his longevity as a בן תורה (Torah-centered person). If you reach for the stars, you might miss the beauty in this world. At the same time, if you don't stretch a bit, you may never grow. Find a balance. Make a plan. Learn what is "good for you" — your proverbial fruits and vegetables — and also what you find geshmack. The most delicate dance we have in life is finding balance in all things. What we learn, and how we dedicate our time, is among those things.

Reach for the stars, but don't be foolish. Growth should not hinder progress. Perfection cannot uproot stability. Keep shteiging, and keep learning!
